FLANDRAU STATE PARK is in southcentral Minnesota, adjacent to and partially within the city of New Ulm in Brown County. It is several blocks southwest of Minnesota State Highway 15 and two miles south of U.S. Highway 14. State highway map index: G-19.

The Cottonwood River, a scenic prairie river, flows southeasterly through Flandrau State Park. Within the park, oxbow marshes trace the river's past meanderings through floodplain forest and grassy expanses. Confining the river and forming the park's boundaries are steep slopes covered with cool, moist forests and oak shaded bluffs dotted with dry prairie knolls.

GEOLOGY: Flandrau lies in a valley cut by the Cottonwood River through 100 to 200 feet of glacial "drift" deposited by glaciers which covered southern Minnesota thousands of years ago.

Underneath this glacial material is sandstone laid down millions of years ago by great seas which once covered North America. Fossilized plant materials and orange-colored iron oxide bands can be seen in the exposed sandstone near the park's eastern boundary.

WILDLIFE: A variety of plant communities provide summer habitat for over 60 species of birds and 25 species of mammals.

Bur oak, eastern red cedar, and aspen thrive on the warm, dry, south-facing bluffs. Nestled amongst the trees are open prairie knolls with big bluestem and Indian grasses, colorful butterfly milkweed, blazing stars, and prairie sunflowers.

Cool, moist shade is abundant under the sugar maple, basswood, and hackberry found on the north facing slopes. Towering cottonwoods dominate portions of the river floodplain while cattails and prairie cord grass grows in many oxbow marshes.

At dusk, visitors can spot deer browsing in the grassy meadows and hear beaver splashing in the river. Raccoon, squirrel, rabbit, mink, coyote, opossum and fox are also found in the park.

Broad-winged hawks nest in the park and can often be seen circling high overhead. Singing on some high branch, indigo buntings and northern orioles claim their territory. Other birds are kingfishers, huminbirds, bluebirds, and several species of woodpeckers.

HISTORY: For hundreds of years, American Indians hunted, fished, and gathered wild plants in the Cottonwood River Valley. No doubt they camped on the river's prairie bluffs where warm summer breezes kept insects away.

Abundant Indian artifacts, campsites, and petroglyphs, which have been found in the surrounding countryside, give evidence of the river valley's natural wealth and earliest inhabitants. Today, buffalo bones can still be found in fresh gravel washouts along the river's banks.

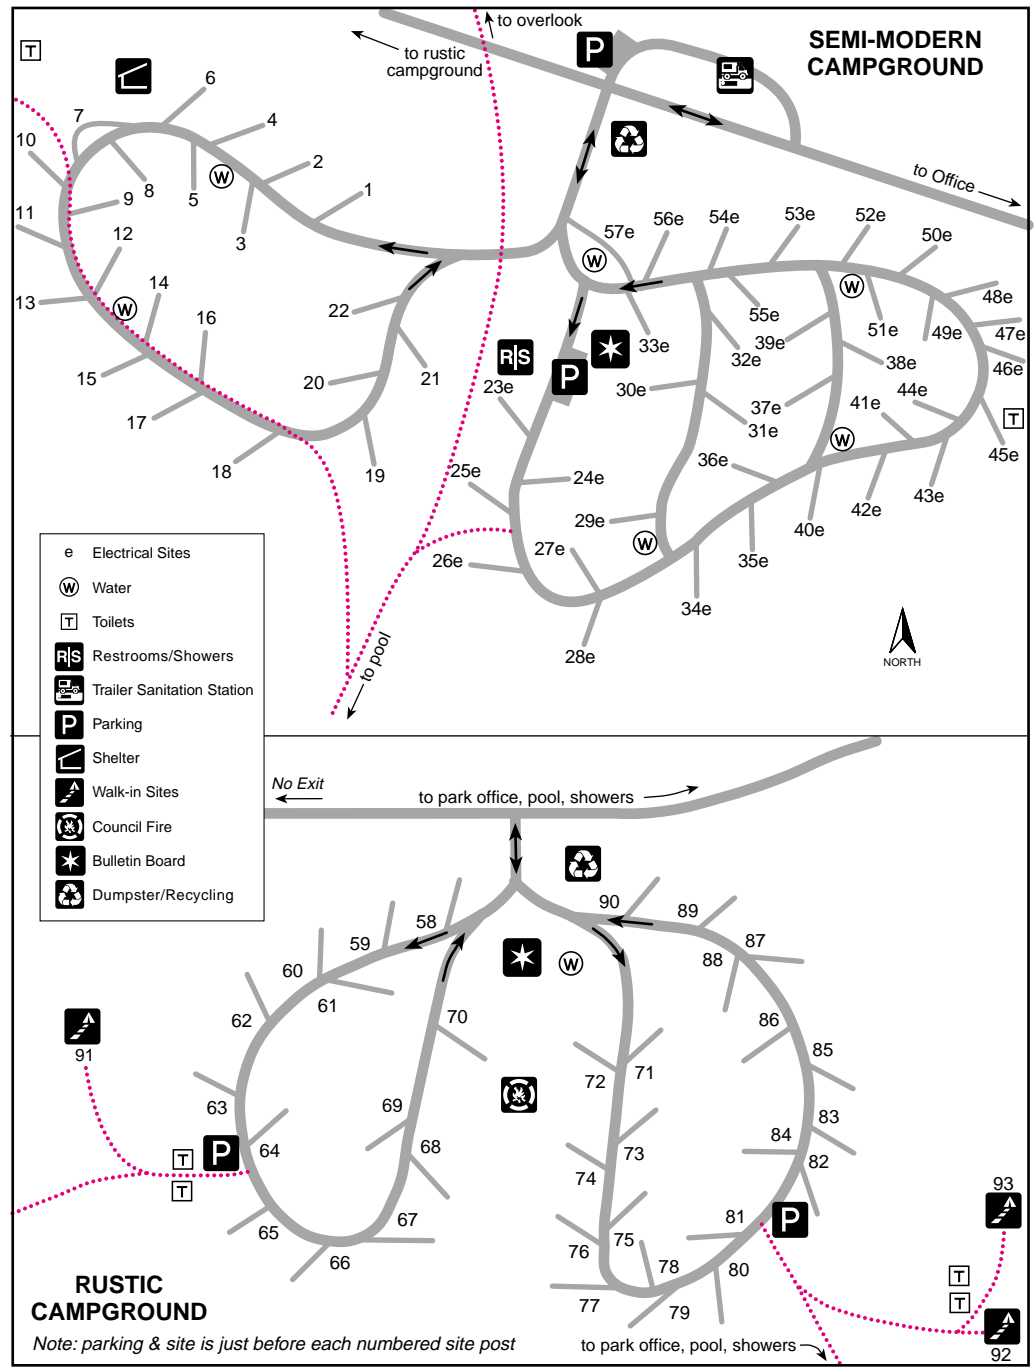

In the mid 1600s to the early 1800s adventurers, fur traders, and explorers came through the Cottonwood River Valley. By the 1830s, the first pioneers and settlers were entering the river valley, clearing and plowing the land for agriculture.

Land was acquired in the 1930s for the creation of a park with a lake and dam. The first of three dams, a beach house, trails, and tree plantings were completed by the Civilian Conservation Corps and the Work Projects Administration from 1935 to 1942. Devastating flood waters destroyed three dams, the last in 1969. Since then, the river has been allowed to return to its natural state.

Originally named Cottonwood State Park, it was changed in 1945 to Flandrau State Park to honor Charles E. Flandrau, a prominent lawyer and Indian agent of the Minnesota River country during the 1860s.

SO EVERYONE CAN ENJOY THE PARK...
